Convincing of undergraduate (GOI, 2020) p converting co or by integrati facilitate the p colleges to ac and financial accreditation licensed for t (NAC), a vert the new policy

The Nation had admitted th mixed and had pr numbers until the a creative association also argued for strict certain minimum level financial support for stre them for alternative purposes like vocational education.

So has been the National Education Policy of 1968 (GOI, 1998) which had also felt concerned about the deteriorating quality of higher education due to uncontrolled expansion of enrolment in colleges and had sought to determine the number of whole-time students admitted to a college with reference to their facilities and faculty. It had, thus, moderated the University Education Commission of 1948 (GOI, 1950) which had argued for stringent affiliation rules and disclosure norms to check deterioration in standards of higher education and limiting the intake of students in colleges to a maximum of 1500. Way back in 1902, the Indian Universities Commission too had urged for stricter monitoring of affiliated institutions by the universities.

Colleges in India predate universities by decades. In fact, the modern higher education in India began with them. Until the beginning of the 20th Century, universities in India had no corporate existence and were merely a body to control courses of study and set examination for the pupils of the affiliated colleges. Until after
